In 1998, English calligrapher Donald Jackson and the Benedictine monks of Saint John's Abbey in Collegeville, Minnesota, began collaborating on the first commissioned illuminated manuscript of the Bible since Gutenberg.

The result, the Saint John's Bible, has ignited the spiritual imagination of Christians and non-Christians alike with its numerous illuminations. During this week of immersion, we will look at the repeated symbols in the Saint John's Bible, how those symbols create conversations between different parts of Scripture, and how these conversations cluster around issues in contemporary Catholic biblical interpretation. The Saint John's Bible is not only a monument to exegesis, it is also a masterpiece of art. It is a doorway into how to interpret Scripture.
